ARMY BILL PASSES SENATE

THE HOUSE BILL TO INCREASE THE EFFICIENCY OF THE ARMY.

Among Other Things It Provides That There Shall be One Lieutenant General, Six Major and Fifteen Brigadier Generals.

Washington, Jan. 18.—Just before 6 o'clock this evening the Senate finally disposed of the army reorganization bill. The measure having originated in the Senate, the final question was not upon its passage, but upon agreeing to the Senate amendments. They were agreed to by a vote of 43 to 23. While party lines were drawn on the measure four Democrats voted for it, Senators Lindsay, of Kentucky; McLaurin, of South Carolina; Morgan, of Alabama and Sullivan, of Mississippi. Senator Hoar, of Massachusetts, who was detained at his home by illness, was paired against the bill with Senator Spooner, of Wisconsin. The bill has occupied practically the entire attention of the Senate since the 3rd day of January when it was made the unfinished business. While the opposition to it at all stages was vigorous it was never bitter. Numerous amendments were made to it, but in general, the committee was sustained and the measure, with the exception of the elimination of the canteen clause, is not widely different from that reported to the Senate. A determined effort to amend the bill to provide against the increase in the strength of the army was defeated by a decisive majority. A notable speech was delivered during the day by Mr. Hale, of Maine, who, while opposing the increase in the strength of the army, stated cogently his reasons for supporting the bill. The measure was sent to conference between the two houses, Senators, Hawley, Republican, of Connecticut; Proctor, Republican, of Vermont, and Cockrell, Democrat, of Missouri, being appointed conferees on the part of the Senate.

Mr. Lodge, of Massachusetts, presented the credentials of his colleague, Mr. Hoar, who was re-elected. This is his fifth election. With the expiration of his present term he will have served 24 years in the Senate.

Mr. Gallinger, of New Hampshire, addressed the Senate in support of his amendment providing for "a proper and adequate rank" for the veterinarians of the army and for a chief veterinarian who should have the rank of major and be attached to the quartermaster general's department in the War Department. Mr. Gallinger also vigorously advocated his amendment providing for the revocation of all licenses granted to American saloons in the Philippines and providing against the manufacture, sale or importation of beer, wines or distilled liquors in the Philippines.

Mr. Platt, of Connecticut, said he hesitated to embark upon legislation for the Philippines when the Taft commission was in charge of affairs in the islands.

Mr. Lodge, chairman of the Philippine committee, said that the 400 or 500 American bar-rooms established and licensed in Manila were doing more harm to the army than to the native inhabitants, as the Filipinos like other tropical people, were temperate.

Mr. Hale, of Maine, agreed that the time had now come for general legislation with respect to the Philippines, but he did not regard the proposed amendment as general legislation, as it dealt largely with the good order and good health of the army. "It is well known," said he, "that the army raised under this bill is to be a fighting army. It is not to fight in the old States of the Union; it is not to fight in Cuba or in Porto Rico; it is not to fight in China but it is to fight in the Philippine Islands. If it were not for the fact that this army is to conduct this war in the Philippines, no committee of this body would present here a proposition for the creation of a permanent standing army of 100,000 men." Mr. Hale said he would be glad if the form of negotiation with the Filipinos could have been adopted as a means of settling the pending conflict, but Senators did not approve of it. He believed, too, it would be better to attach a temporary force to the present standing army, but the Senate would not hear to that. He pointed out that unless the bill was passed, there would be in the Philippines after July next only about 20,000 American soldiers. Pressed by the Filipinos forces they would be "hemmed in Manila" and would be "lucky if they were not driven into the sea."

"No Senator could stand that," declared the Maine Senator. "No man—no party could stand up such a condition. Therefore, I am constrained, as much as I am opposed to it, to support this measure." Mr. Hale declared that a standing army of 30,000 provided every soldier needed in time of peace.

Mr. Spooner, of Wisconsin, in reply to Mr. Teller, of Colorado, said that he hoped a joint committee of Congress to investigate the situation of the people in the islands would be provided during this session of Congress and that he (Mr. Spooner,) had undertaken to frame a resolution providing for such a committee.

The Meeting Continued.

There have been conversions every night, without exception, since the meeting at the First Presbyterian church began. The service last night was one of the most fruitful of the series. Following the guidance of the Holy Spirit, whose powerful workings show no signs of abatement, the pastor and elders of the church have decided to continue the meeting.

The night services next week will be at 8 o'clock.

The services tomorrow will be as follows: Sunday School 10 a. m. Preaching 11 a. m., Inquiry meeting 4:30 p. m., night service 7:30.

To Leave Greensboro.

Mr. E. K. Huff, who for six years has been engaged in making and repairing vehicles, will shortly leave this city. He will be manager of Mr. John Huff's buggy manufacturing establishment at East Bend, about twenty miles from Winston. Mr. Huff is a competent workman, and thoroughly understands his business. He leaves Greensboro because his present quarters are too crowded and no other place can be secured.

An Appropriate Sermon.

Rev. A. J. Cooper, a colored missionary who has just located in Greensboro, informs The Telegram that he preached two sermons yesterday in the county jail, or rather preached the same sermon twice, once to the colored prisoners, of whom there were at the time seven, and once to the whites, six in number. He took for his text, "The way of the transgressor is hard," and informs us that the sermon touched deeply the hearers, bringing tears in many instances.

Market Robbed.

Thieves entered the meat stall conducted by Mr. H. W. Venable at Low's store on Asheboro street Thursday night and looted it of about 100 pounds of fresh meat. The thief seems to have been an expert at the business. He entered by means of a "dummy" key and locked the door when he left. The police are working on the case.

A Book Machine.

Mr. Walter Blair, of Clerk Trogdon's office, has a typewriter which is a business institution. It is a book machine, and holds the large record books of the office like sheets of paper. It is a great convenience and saves untold labor in transcribing records.

To Build Storage Rooms.

The Guilford Lumber Company are making preparations to build a large storage room at their factory on Ashe street, and as soon as brick can be procured the work will be begun. This company is doing a large business, and is in a prosperous condition.

Euterpe Club.

The Euterpe Club repeats its recital recently given, Monday afternoon at 4:30, in the McAdoo parlors. Admission 35 cents.

Grimsley Chairman.

The State Association of City Schools is now in session at Raleigh. Prof. G. A. Grimsley of Greensboro, is chairman.

THE QUEEN IS DYING

LYING IN AN UNNATURAL SLEEP

MAY PASS AWAY AT ANY MOMENT OR MAY LIVE FOR DAYS.

The Decline of All Her Powers Has Been Rapid for Days and She is Now Unable to Move Without Assistance.

By Wire to The Telegram.

Oowes, Jan. 19.—At 3 o'clock this afternoon the Queen is growing perceptibly worse.

It is feared that she is dying. The decline of all her powers has been rapid for several days past.

Her condition is now described as that she is unable to move without assistance. The reports that she is suffering from insomnia are the reverse of the truth. She is sleeping the time away, and it is with the utmost difficulty she was kept awake by the attendants even during her last drives early in the week.

It is feared that she may pass away at any moment in her unnatural sleep. On the other hand it may be possible for her to rally from her dormant state and live for days.

To the Citizens of Greensboro:

In view of the fact that there has been considerable agitation in the last few weeks with regard to the sale of liquor in our community, and in furtherance of this idea, application having been made to the city aldermen for license to sell liquor in our community through the barroom system, and in view of the fact that there is a great diversity of opinion as to whether or not the last vote on the dispensary meant an entire abolition of the liquor traffic or a desire to continue the same under another system and in view of the fact that every home in Greensboro may be affected seriously by the matter, and with a desire on the part of all good people to have perfect harmony in our town—which harmony never can exist unless things are settled justly—is it not reasonable that we should get together and settle this matter positively as to what the people meant by the last vote taken in this town? A great many people claim that the vote never could have gone as it did if it had been understood that it was for the purpose of opening barrooms. In fact, a large number of people claim that in voting as they did, they voted for the entire abolition of the liquor traffic. These people will not be satisfied with the opening of the barroom. We do not believe the good people of Greensboro wish to allow the people who engage in this traffic arrogating to themselves the entire results of this election.

Neither are we in favor of placing the entire responsibility of granting license upon the city aldermen. We believe the responsibility should rest where it belongs, on the free and untrammelled right of the citizens, expressing their opinion by an intelligent vote as to whether they want liquor or do not want liquor, letting the majority of the white people of the town control in this matter, and then if the majority is in favor of the sale of liquor the minority will have to submit until such time as we can get another vote on it. In view of this, we deem it well for all good citizens to meet in mass meeting in the court house tomorrow afternoon at 3 o'clock and let us discuss this matter which is of so much importance to the welfare of this community.

Great School Section.

Prof. E. L. Middleton, lately a teacher at Carey, has been in Greensboro and the county two or three days in the interest of the school books published by the B. F. Johnson Company of Richmond. He is visiting the graded schools and the private schools. He says this portion of North Carolina is the greatest school section.

The Greensboro Telegram gives the gratifying information that the erection of a colonial monument at the Guilford Battle Ground is assured. The Telegram, in its usual enterprising way, is leading the movement, and has already secured more than half of the thousand dollars desired. The monument will celebrate the bravery and virtues of the patriots who fought for the cause of freedom in North Carolina in the ten years preceding the National Declaration of Independence.—Raleigh Times.

Judge Boyd's Commission.

Judge James E. Boyd has received from the President his life commission as Judge of the United States Court of the Western North Carolina District. Judge Boyd expects to go to Washington next Friday to take the oath of office before the Chief Justice of the United States. He will be sworn in on the old bible upon which all the Chief Justices have taken the oath since 1808.

Judge Boyd's most remarkable career certainly negatives the idea that there is bad luck in odd numbers, for all the various promotions that have come to him have come on odd dates.

On 13th of June, 1880, he was commissioned United States Attorney by President Hayes; on the 11th of July, 1884, he was commissioned United States Attorney by President Arthur; on the 29th of May, 1897, was nominated Assistant Attorney General by President McKinley, on the 31st of May, 1897, he was confirmed and commissioned, on the 1st of June, 1897, qualified Assistant Attorney General; on the 11th of July, 1900, was commissioned as Judge by President McKinley; on the 15th of December, 1900, was nominated to Senate for Judge by President McKinley, on the 9th of January, 1901, he was confirmed Judge, and his commission bears date of January 9, 1901.

IN HONOR OF GENERAL R. E. LEE

LEGISLATURE ADJOURNS AFTER A BRIEF SESSION.

Gudger Voted Against a Resolution Inviting Dr. Curry to Address the Body on Political Grounds.

Special Dispatch to The Telegram.

Raleigh, Jan. 19.—Today the Senate adopted a resolution inviting Dr. J. L. M. Curry, the eminent educator and trustee of the Peabody Fund to address the Legislature. Dr. Curry has addressed every Southern Legislature, and some of them many times on the subject of education. Senator Gudger voted against the resolution, saying that he had understood that Dr. Curry had lobbied at Washington to unseat Congressman Crawford and to seat Richmond Person.

Roberson, of Guilford, introduced a bill to amend the charter of High Point and allow it to issue bonds.

The House and Senate both had brief sessions, adjourning at eleven o'clock, till Monday, in honor of General Robert E. Lee's Birthday.

VALUE OF GOOD HUMOR.

The Cares and Worries of Everyday Life Should Not Drive Out the Sunshine.

Happily for our humanity, there is much truth in the poet's assertion that "hope springs eternal in the human breast." And now that the summer is actually over and gone, and we must face ice-bound winter, the true house mother, although she gives a sigh of regret for her garden and the happy outdoor life, cannot but feel a distinct pleasure in thinking of the many comforts that are possible to add to the warm home nest, says the New York Tribune. Here a set of new curtains will improve the dining room. What an air of cheerfulness can be given to the hall by one of those velvet stair carpets, which contrast so well with the white baluster. What dainty accessories can be added as surprises to her daughters' bedrooms. What good dinners she will have to tickle the palate of her poor husband, who has lived without the real comforts of home all summer, etc. But while we think of the material comfort of our family, do not let us forget that the great essential after all is a cheerful spirit. In beginning the winter, and opening our homes for the season's duties, let every house mistress make the resolution not to find fault, and not to complain, and while she ministers to the creature comforts of her household, let her with the same faithful unselfishness check every fretful remark or tart reply. Those hurried breakfasts in dark December, with the children to get off to school, and the husband to business, will be far less trying if kind, good humor pours out the coffee and finds missing articles.

It is astonishing how many really good, unselfish women have a habit of constant fretfulness that is almost intolerable. The cares and worries of their lives cling closely to them. Even their cheerfulness is querulous, and gives no real warmth or comfort. Thackeray evidently esteems good humor as one of the highest feminine attributes, for he continually refers to it when he desires to make his heroines attractive—the expression, "kind, good humor" occurs again and again in his books, and he always puts it in with a little tender touch, as if he valued it! Certainly it is the sunshine of our homes, and miserable, indeed, is the household that has not the warmth and light of its influence.

Considerate.

"Bridget, I don't think it is hardly the thing for you to entertain company in the kitchen."

"Don't ye worry, mum. Shure, an' Oi wouldn't be after deprivin' ye o' th' parlor."—Philadelphia Bulletin.

Women Rulers.

Considerably more than half the human race is ruled by women. Two women—the empress dowager of China and the queen of England—alone govern about half the entire population of the world. The third in importance is young Queen Wilhelmina of Holland, whose home land numbers less than 5,000,000 souls, but whose colonies have 30,000,000. Spain is ruled by a woman. Queen Regent Christina, in the minority of her son. It is expected that the queen mother Margherita will have great influence over her son's kingdom, but her case is not needed to establish the preponderance of woman-ruled races.

THE POOR STILL IN NEW YORK.

BUT THEY ARE MUCH LESS POOR THAN THEY USED TO BE.

Dr. Slicer Thinks They Are Poorer—The Brightness of American Carpets—The Clergyman Who Wanted to Hire Some One to Swear.

Correspondence of The Telegram.

New York, Jan. 19.—The practice some of the speakers who have the ear of the public have of "talking through their hats" is nearly as productive of many false ideas as the yellowest of our yellow journals. The magnifying of the ills of humanity has become a favorite sporting ground for those who deal in geyser-like bursts of eloquence and tear-compelling flights of pathos. One would suppose that the poor had just been discovered, but the fact, as attested since the days of Holy Writ first dawned, that "the poor we have with us always." Hence it is easy for the political economist to array his figures and tell us whether or not the poor man is poorer than he was and whether or not there are more of them than there were. One of the speakers, Rev. Dr. Slicer, who is one of those favorite speakers who like to squeeze their thoughts into epigrammatic sentences easy to catch the attention of the hearer or reader, and are so careful to condense their sayings into phrases of just the precise length as to squeeze the truth out of the alleged facts in order to get them into the requisite compass, assured his hearers in his sermon last Sunday that the poor are now very poor indeed, and comparatively very much worse off than they ever were. He probably believed what he said, and yet he could have looked over his crowded congregation and could not have discerned a single woman in it who was dressed in a calico gown. If he had gone down to one of the ferries and scanned the lines of working-girls coming over one of the rivers to work for the day, he would not have seen a single calico gown in the crowd. If he had attempted to cross that surging crowd that pours out from the entrance to the Brooklyn Bridge, he would have failed to discern such a dress among them. Not a man in those lines would have been found without a "billed shirt" on, with gleaming bosom, and perhaps a diamond or a gold stud in its front.

Dr. Slicer need go but one generation back, and asking his father and mother about the matter, would learn that in their early days even fine ladies wore calicoes, and most of them had but one spare gown of fine material, but even the fineness of that was but as homespun to silk in comparison with the rich stuffs now worn. Why, Mrs. Levi P. Morton had a hundred gowns in her wardrobe, most of them on skeleton frames, padded to the proper shape. The wife of the bankrupt banker, Shiras, had ten gowns under way at Stern's, when he failed. Each of these cost $240. A servant girl's bonnet these times cost more than the whole wardrobe for a year of a servant girl of 1840, and not one wife out of a dozen employed a servant. When the nineteenth century began, a laborer got two shillings a day in this land of plenty. Now he gets two shillings an hour.

No, this Dr. Slicer slices off his talk like grocers do chipped beef, but he slices it too thin. There is no set on earth that is doing as well as the American workingman is doing and has been doing for years. And he is happy, so far as professional agitators will let him be; so happy, indeed, that his work has a character all its own. A traveler abroad found he could always tell, without being told, which carpets were of American make—they were so much brighter. It seemed as though the American weaver, as he sat at his loom, would every now and then reach out his good right hand and fling handfuls of sunshine across the wool as he worked away with cheery heart.

Bellevue Hospital Scandals.

If there are any second-hand lynchings just now there is a well-defined zone of indignation throughout the city that would like to enter into an arrangement with them against the Bellevue Hospital scandals. The public seems to feel, like the man did who was driving a load of potatoes up a long hill, and looking down the steep incline, when he reached the summit, found that the tailboard had dropped, and every blessed potato had been spilled upon the ground. Not feeling able to do justice to the subject he was profuse in thanks to a sweeper who happened along and was ripping out some hot, although not exactly classic, imprecations. The public is very tender

WIFE'S PROPERTY RIGHTS

Senate Declines to Change the Present Law.

News and Observer.

Yesterday's session was a day of debates, the bill by Senator Henderson to allow the husband the same right to sell property as the wife in certain cases consumed nearly two hours in discussion and was defeated on its second reading.

Soon after the Senate convened Seargent-at-arms Smith announced, "Mr. President, His Excellency the Governor of North Carolina is in the Senate Chamber." Governor Aycock at that moment entered and the Senators received him standing, and he was invited by the Chair to a seat on the floor of the Chamber. He shook hands with many of his friends and remained in the Senate perhaps for a quarter of an hour.

The Committee on Propositions and Grievances reported favorably the bill by Senator Brown against the sale of cigarettes, and upon motion of Senator Woodard, of Wilson, it was made the special order for 12 o'clock next Wednesday. Senator Woodard made the comment that this was a very sweeping and general bill and would require careful consideration.

Among the important bill introduced yesterday as appears in the report of the proceeding below are several civil amendments to the Code by Senator Foushee: a bill by Senator Smith for a graduated tax on charters of corporations a bill by Senator Travis to provide four months public school in every country and a measure by Senator Ward promote agricultural fairs.

The Senate passed Senator Henderson's bill, regarding qualifications for justices of the peace and for forms of acknowledgement. Several bills provoked discussion and went back to the committees.

The bill by Senator Henderson which excited so much discussion read as follows:

Section 1. That section 1831 of the Code be amended by adding thereto the following: "And every husband, who shall be living separate from his wife, either under judgment of divorce by a competent court or under deed of separation executed by said husband and wife and registered in the county in which he resides, or whose wife shall have been declared an idiot or lunatic, shall have power to convey his real estate without the consent of his wife."

Section 2. That section 1832 of the Code be amended by adding thereto the following: "And every husband whose wife shall abandon him shall have power to convey his real estate without consent of his wife."

WOMAN HANGS HERSELF.

A Virginia Lady Ties a Rope Around Her Neck and Rolls off the Veranda.

Staunton, Va., Dispatch, 17th.

Mrs. Annie E. Craig, widow of a distinguished member of the Virginia bar and herself a member of a prominent family, committed suicide early this morning by hanging herself. Wrapping a rope around her neck several times, she tied it securely to the third-story veranda and rolled over the railing. Her next door neighbor, opening the blinds of her home, was horrified to find the body of Mrs. Craig dangling from a rope by the side of the porch. The milkman, who arrived about that time, took down the still warm but lifeless body. Mrs. Craig wore only a thin wrapper.

The act was premeditated. Mrs. Craig persuaded her attendant to attend early mass and took advantage of her absence to put an end to her own existence. She evidently proceeded very deliberately. She took the rope, fastened it to a ring in the ceiling of the porch, wrapped it around her neck three times, caught the end securely and then rolled or stepped over the railing.

Mrs. Craig had been in ill health for many years and had spent much time in Northern hospitals. Her husband, Col. W. S. Craig, shot himself several years ago, and her mother died suddenly last July while in a sanitarium.

Since that time she had been a physical wreck, and her mind had been affected. Mrs. Craig was forty-six years old, and a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Robert M. Ayers. Her mother was Miss Callaghan, of West Virginia. Deceased is survived by her father, who lived with her; her sister, Mrs. Virginia Edwards, of New York, and two brothers, Messrs. Asher Ayers, of Baltimore, and Robert Ayers, of Louisville, Ky. Her only child, Dr. Robert Craig, is in charge of the Marine hospital at Pittsburgh, Pa.

Col. Craig, her husband, was a Republican leader, one of the most brilliant criminal lawyers in Virginia, and filled the offices of the United States district attorney and collector of internal revenue.

THE POOR STILL IN NEW YORK.

in regard to any ill-treatment of the sick or the insane. It doesn't look at it from the standpoint of the Bellevue doctor or nurse, who feels that he must learn the effects of blows upon the human frame in order to be capable of curing the ills to which humanity is heir. As vivisection is to the scientific doctor, so is the distribution of hard knocks to the callow physician or student, producing a sort of buffer state between himself and ignorance.

Apropos to the potato-loser swearing by proxy a story is in point that has just crept out on Jersey City Heights. A Methodist minister there, who had risen to the dignity of a Ph. D., very much disliked a young lady member of his congregation, who returned the dislike with interest. The minister became ill, and what does this young lady do, by way of heaping coals of fire upon her clerical enemy's head, but insist on going to the parsonage every day to help keep the house while others nursed the child. This greatly exasperated the clergyman, which can readily be imagined as he was very bald, so that the coals of fire speedily found material upon which to sizzle to a very tumultuous degree. At last he could bear it no longer, and he besought a friendly lady to help him in this wise: "Do you think that for a quarter of a dollar you could get somebody to come some cursing?" The lady thought that was rather cheap for cursing, and said so. "It is against my principles," said the Ph. D., "but I feel that it should be done, and I am willing to pay twenty-five cents for it. I would like somebody to go over on that hill, where I could see him doing it, and do me that cursing. My feelings must be relieved."

Pepsin preparations often fail to relieve indigestion because they can digest only albuminous foods. There is one preparation that digests all classes of food, and that is Kodol Dyspepsia Cure. It cures the worst cases of indigestion and gives instant relief, for it digests what you eat. Howard Gardner.

R. F. BEASLEY, Editor and Manager

SATURDAY, JANUARY 19

General Robert E. Lee's birthday is observed today throughout the South. The span of his life reached from January 19, 1807 to October 12, 1870. "Bravest of the brave," his bravery was tempered by compassion; greatest of the great, his greatness was emphasized by humility; honor, duty and fidelity were his watchwords, and upon the whole white-paged record of his life there is not one spot.

LIBERTY.

Not being as reckless in ascribing the authorship of our quotations as our esteemed brother of the Raleigh Post, we shall not undertake to say who it was that inquired of liberty as to the magnitude of the crimes committed in its name—unless forced to. However, if the good woman had lived on till now instead of losing her head when she did, she might have still been convinced of the truth of her observation. Concerning liberty the editor of Charity and Children delivers a piece of his mind as follows:

The Wilmington Messenger refers to the proposed compulsory educational law as a "blue law," and scouts the idea that the children of thriftless and stupid parents shall be compelled by the State to attend school. We believe in freedom as much as anybody, but when a man uses his "freedom" to hang a millstone about the neck of his own children he is unworthy to be a free man. There are men in North Carolina actually opposed to education. They believe that learning makes fools of folks. We have talked with some of these men. Many of them have a house full of children. What good will a public school, however well equipped, do the children of a man of that stripe? But the promise has been made again and again that every white boy and girl in North Carolina will be given a chance. It makes no difference what stands in the way—it must be removed. If a stupid father will not send his child to a school provided by the State without cost to him he should be compelled by the strong arm of the law to do so; and if that takes away his freedom, let it go, he is in no sense worthy of it.

The fact seems to have escaped notice that the Democratic promise was to give the children a chance. It was not to give the parents a chance to send them. Those who made the promise may not have meant it that way, but they certainly promised it. The above quotation rightly puts the question. How are these children to have the chance when their parents refuse to allow them to go to school? When a child is cheated out of a chance to learn to read and write in the name of liberty the crime is as great as the thousands of others that have been committed in liberty's name.

Since the above was written a gentleman came into The Telegram office and said that of his own knowledge he knew of two public school districts where the money was being wasted because the people would not send their children. They had had a falling out about who should teach, and as a matter of spite the most of the children were being kept away. Whose liberty is being infringed upon in the hundreds of instances like this all over North Carolina? What chance do these children have? How is the Democratic promise to these going to be carried out?

The days of the wonderful old Queen are certainly numbered. The great doctors may patch up the frail body from time to time and add yet a few more days or weeks, but it is worn out and must soon be laid away.

In voting against the resolution asking Dr. Curry to address the Legislature, on the grounds which he assigned, Senator Gudger drew himself up to microscopic proportions.

The Telegram is the only paper in Greensboro giving today's Legislative news.

Some Few Lobbyists.

News and Observer.

The school book war is on.

There was a joint meeting of the Senate and House committee on education yesterday, and at the meeting there were visible to the naked eye something fewer than four hundred and forty-seven publishing house attorneys and lobbyists. Not much fewer though.

The final consideration of the question by the committee was postponed until next Friday, on account of the fact that the bill has just been printed and the members have not had time to maturely consider it.

The Senate and House committees on education held a joint meeting in the Senate chamber yesterday afternoon. The bill under consideration was the one introduced by Senator Aycock of Wayne, on the subject of school text books. They decided to postpone action until Friday at two o'clock.

Senator Aycock moved to amend so that all the members of the State board of education, should be the State text book commission.

Legislative Sparks.

Correspondence Charlotte Observer.

The dog and the cigarette are now receiving their share of legislative attention. The dog's friends will make a fight for him. There are many men in North Carolina who care ten times as much for a dog as for a sheep or for public education, for that matter. The trust people will be sure to make a pretty fight on the bill to prohibit the sale of cigarettes in the State. This is the bill which Senator Brown introduced and which gets a favorable committee report.

A bill to prevent lobbying is before the Legislature. Lobbying is a hard thing to prevent, for the simple reason that but little of it, relatively speaking, is done in the lobby itself, but really in hotels or boarding houses or in the streets. The ways of the lobbyist are past finding out. He moves mysteriously.

There is a bill before the Legislature requiring all executions to be in the penitentiary. Your correspondent recalls such a bill about 16 years ago and that it died on the calendar. Yet it has many friends.

THE ROADS OF OLD.

The roads of old, how fair they gleamed,
How long each winding way was deemed!
In days gone by how wondrous high
Their little hills and houses seemed.

The morning road that led to school
Was framed in dew, that clung as cool
To childish feet as waves that beat
About the sunbeams in a pool;

The river road that crept beside
The dreamy alder-bordered tide,
Where fish at play on Saturday
Left some young hopes ungratified;

The valley road that wandered through
Twin vales—and heard no wind that blew;
The cow-bell's clank from either bank
Was all the noise it ever knew;

The village road that used to drop
Its daisies at the blacksmith shop,
And leave some trace of rustic grace
To tempt the busiest eye to stop;

The woodland road whose windings dim
Were known to watchers straight and slim;
How slow it moved, as if it loved
Each listening leaf and arching limb;

The market road that felt the charm
Of lights on many a sleepy farm,
When whirling clock and crowing cock
Gave forth the marketman's alarm;

These all renew their olden spell
With rocky cliff and sunny dell,
With purling brook and grassy nook,
They bordered childhood's country well.

And we who near them used to dwell
Can but the same sweet story tell,
That on them went young-eyed Content—
They bordered childhood's country well.
—Ethelwyn Wetherald, in Youth's Companion.

HOMESPUN LINEN TREASURES

Great Stores of Garments and Kerchiefs Preserved by Women in East Pennsylvania.

The distribution to the heirs of old Mrs. Bashore of 111 frilled night caps, 24 calico sun bonnets, 53 calico and gingham aprons, 27 homespun chemises, 56 calico handkerchiefs and a variety of other articles of female attire was nothing unusual in the hill districts of East Pennsylvania. Nearly every elderly woman there takes pride in the hand-made garments she accumulates. An elderly resident of Millersburg has six large drawers filled with hand-made linen garments she had spun out of flax and made up in the last 50 years, says the New York Sun.

These old women in the hill districts live with their children and have very little to do. All have spinning wheels and they are experts in the manipulation of flax. Here and there are ancient looms to weave their linen thread. The old women have nimble fingers for drawing threads, for knitting, for crocheting and for sewing. Their designs are primitive.

Thousands of substantial linen garments, yellow with age, can be found in a day's travel hereabouts if the visitor is known. The old women would not think of parting or selling with anything they make. Their handiwork is well preserved and looked over once a month, on a Sunday while the others are at church.

The old women do not care so much if they haven't thousands of dollars to bequeath to their heirs, if they have plenty of such garments to devise. In some instances the old women have each article marked with a slip of paper, upon which is written: "This is for Mary Ann." "This is for Jacob," for Sarah Eliza, for little Maggie, for Malinda Almarretta, and so on. In the case of Mrs. Bashore all her accumulated wearing apparel was willed to her four nieces. Not long ago old Mrs. Swensen died. She left seven drawers filled with linen sheets, pillow cases and a large variety of old linen homespun garments. When the first drawer was opened a card was found on which was written: "All in this drawer goes to Tillie." Tillie was her daughter. Every drawer contained such a card, and one written line showed to whom it was to go. Yet every heir was specially enjoined by a note found in the old lady's Bible that "Not a stitch is to be sold of what I freely give, because my fingers have made these articles only for you, my dear."

With few exceptions such articles are rarely used. But are held as keepsakes. Some young housewives can show drawers full of homespun linen which has been handed down from generation. Some of the linen is worn through at the folds. The other day aged Rebecca Akers died. Each of her three daughters received two drawers of linens. Nearly all the garments are made on a pattern common a century ago. The towels and sheets are coarse homespun, home bleached and wide of hem.

An oddity are the long gray wool stockings knit by the old women in the style in revolutionary days. Some of the hosiery was so large that the stockings could be worn over the shoes in snowy weather. It is a common thing to find a linen burial shroud in old women's effects, they having made their grave habiliments with their own hands years ago, including stockings, gloves and cap.

NUTS AND KERNELS.

Nutrition Delicacies from Them Discovered by Cookery Teachers' Association.

The citizens of the metropolis do not know the obligations they are under to a group of talented professional women who are united in the organization known as the New York Association of Teachers of Cookery. The members are not only excellent chefs, but they are students, and some of them masters of physiology and chemistry. Besides endeavoring to inculcate better culinary methods, they do much toward improving the quality of the food served upon the daily table, says the New York Post.

The founder of the society, a woman, is an expert in physiological chemistry, and has done much toward the creation of nutritious dishes made of various edible nuts and kernels. She believes that these substances have been overlooked and that they are superior to nearly all the vegetable fruits and even cereals so far as health and enjoyment of life are concerned. In her demonstrations she employs almonds, peanuts, pecan nuts, Brazil nuts, filberts, hickory nuts, walnuts, chestnuts, hazelnuts, chinquapins, peach and cherry pits, and even butternuts. She has invented recipes for making these into confections, cakes, puddings, salads, breads, soups and side dishes. She was the first to point out that the Chinese custom of eating watermelon seeds, so often laughed at by travelers, has a sound hygienic basis, and that the contents of these little seeds contained more nutriment than all the watery flesh of the melon. Her latest suggestion is that of the drying of nuts and kernels, the removal of the thin containing skin which is found inside the shell and the grinding of the meat into meal or flour.

The Success of The Farish-Stafford-Campbell Company Assured.

Charity towards all mankind is one of the Divine injunctions and if it had been fashionable to incorporate business organizations when this order of charity was founded no doubt it would have embraced all incorporated business institutions. It has recently been rumored in North Carolina that the Farish-Stafford-Campbell Company would not be able to continue their business and that the enterprise had disbanded. From a charitable standpoint of view we will say that the parties who circulated this report have been misinformed or are laboring under some serious mental derangement.

The parties who constitute the incorporators of the Farish-Stafford-Campbell Company are not made of the sort of material which is bent about by any and all influences which may be brought to bear against their success, but are unwavering in their purposes and are determined to succeed if energy, ability and integrity and fixedness of purpose means success.

It is possible that Mr. George L. Campbell, of Baltimore, Md., a most reputable gentleman who is one of the Charter members of the Farish-Stafford-Campbell Company, may withdraw from the organization, and if so, the name of said organization will be changed, but this in no way will effect prosecution of the business purposes of the Company. The gentlemen who compose the make up of this organization are all men, whose reputation of strict business integrity is unimpeachable, and with their thorough knowledge of the cotton goods commission business their intimate acquaintance with the wholesale dry goods and converting trade any mill accounts entrusted to them will be properly cared for and the success of such mills assured—so far as the selling department goes. Messrs. Wilson & Bradbury, of Philadelphia and New York, do all the financing for these parties, paying all bills who sell through these gentlemen at the end of each month for all goods sold during the month, and collecting all bills receivable. Messrs. Wilson & Bradbury have been in business over forty years, have more than a million dollars in their business, and are known to be absolutely reliable in all they say and do. With the Farish-Stafford-Campbell Company managing and directing the Southern cotton goods department and having as good sales organizations as any other commission house in America, actively in all the markets of this country and as good foreign outlet as any other house, success must follow. Any references which mill men may seek can be had by request, either of Messrs. Wilson & Bradbury, or Farish-Stafford-Campbell Company, 217 Chestnut street, Philadelphia, or 93 and 95 Franklin street, New York.

Bill Blake and the Bear

Also Two Girls Who Seemed to Need No Protection.

A QUARTER of a century ago, when the valleys and bottom-lands of Pennsylvania were decked in the abundant growth of timber which was nature's heritage, any self-respecting log jobber, if his attention had been directed to the desolate Kettle Creek region, would have turned up his nose disdainfully and passed on to greener fields, says a Williamsport (Pa.) correspondent of the N. Y. Sun. But the days when a contractor could choose his place of residence are practically past, and so it was that "Hank" Bellman was reduced to the extremity last fall of erecting his shanty and starting operations in the heart of the jungle-like forest overlooking Kettle Creek. The camp is fitted into a little patch of clearing ground far over the mountain top. A narrow turnpike winds up to it from the highway hundreds of feet below, and beyond it, extending into the wilderness, great wastes of fallen trees, stumps and piles of hemlock bark show what the woodsman's ax has been doing all winter. Directly surrounding the shanty the trees have not all been removed, and on the frosty winter nights, when the snow hangs in great layers upon the heavy branches and the air is so crisp and keen that sound travels through it with as much precision as though shot from a megaphone, the panthers and catamounts climb up into the tall timber and wake the slumbering echoes of the forest, as well as the boys in the camp, with their wild and dismal howlings.

One of those nights came about a month ago. The panthers and wildcats yelled more furiously, it seemed, than they had done before during the winter, and added to their wailing was the voice of the north wind as it tossed the snow against the weather-beaten sides of the shanty. For that night the shanty was good enough for the boys. When supper was over and the storm showed no signs of abating they all gathered together in the big "lobby," which is home, club, society and Sunday school to them, and prepared to make the best of a night indoors. Now these woodsmen are not the sort of men who can spend an evening over a book or enjoy themselves at any tame diversion, and on this night even Jack poker had no charm for them. The fact is that they were just in the mood to listen to one of Bill Blake's stories.

"Say, Bill," said one of the woodsmen, "what tarnation cussedness ever possessed you to leave the good job you had in the Slate Run camp last fall and come up to this pesky hole?" Bill Blake puffed contemptively at his pipe for a moment, after which he said:

"Well, mebbly I had a purty good reason, if I wanted to tell."

Then he laughed quietly. Nobody spoke, and when Bill had finally gone over the details in his own mind, he continued:

"You see I'd never have gone to the Slate Run job in the first place, but for one thing. Down at the city, where I had a lovely suit as coachman for a rich lady, I got knocked out in a love affair. You needn't grin, Shorty. I kept myself purty spick-an-span on that job, an', if I do say it, they wa'n't many handsomer ribbon slingers drivin' down the pike. Wall, who the gal was don't matter, an' it hain't no one's business who the dude was 'at cut me out. I only mention the incident for the sake of explainin' why it was 'at I ever went back to the lumber business at all."

"You see, everything went sort o' contrary with me in town after that. I got sick of the whole business, an' all the time while I was drivin' them spinkin' hosses through the streets my mind would keep a-runnin' back to the old camp life, where I knowed they wa'n't like to be no dudes nor no gals to play hide-an'-seek with a feller's heart. So back I goes to the old Slate Run job, where I was well known an' only had to whistle to get work."

"Wall, the very first night I spent in the camp I made up my mind it wa'n't no use for me to try to get away from the gals. Right in that camp they was two as purty gals as you'd care to see—nieces of the boss's wife, I guess, a-visitin' thar. they told me, for their health. I found out afore I was in the camp very long 'at they was a little too healthy for that place as it was, an' you'll see purty soon what made me think so."

"The damsel started right in by flirtin' with me, an' they was so winsome 'at I forgot all about the city gal right away. I met 'em half way in the flirtin' game an' it seemed to me 'at was in clover. The other fellows was all gettin' jealous of the way the gals was shinin' 'round me; but it wa'n't exactly my fault if they wa'n't in it, so I didn't bother about that. Wall, things went on lovely for about a week, an' one night the gals says to me, they says: 'Let's go along down an' get some apples.'"

"Now the o'chard was quite a ways below the camp an' it was closed in by a big board fence about six feet high."

Of course, I went. We had a jolly time goin' toward the o'chard an' the gals seemed more lovin' to me than ever. When we got thar an' I seed the high fence I wanted to help the gals over, but they says: 'No, you go fust, an' then we'll foller.' So of course I went. I put a board up to the fence an' clumb over an' then waited to ketch the gals. Wall, it must have been a minute I waited thar an' I didn't hear a sound from the other side."

"Yes," says I to myself, "I see what they're at; they don't want me to help 'em over after all." Then I says out loud, sort o' pleasant like: "Oh, I thought you'd change your minds, purty dearies!" But they wa'n't no answer, an' I begins to get kinder mad. I was jest startin' to look over the fence an' see what was the matter when I heard a growl behind me an' turned 'round quick. Lands o' rattlesnakes, boys, what a sight met my eyes! Thar was a big, ugly-lookin' cinnamon b'ar standin' under an apple tree an' a-lookin' right at me. Wall, I'll bet those beautiful locks of mine stood on end like porcupine quills. They wa'n't no use feelin' for a gun, 'cause I knowed I didn't have any, not even a jackknife or weapon of no kind. It was a leetle hotter proposition than I wanted to tackle jest then, so I bade Mr. Bruin a hasty farewell an' made for the fence."

"But now, boys, come the trouble in earnest. It was an easy enough matter to get over that fence, but when it come to gettin' back, why that was a different thing. I seen I couldn't do it nohow, an' so I jest stood an' turned my back to the fence an' waited. Bruin was within three feet of me then, an' he riz up onto his hind feet an' stood thar movin' his head about in a threatenin' manner an' motionin' at me with his big, ugly paws. The moon was shinin' out bright an' clear above us, an' as he stood thar between me an' it he was one of the most skeery-lookin' sights I ever seen. He didn't appear to be nervous or discontented in the least, an' I made up my mind I wouldn't be nervous either. So, lookin' straight into his face an' reckonin' the distance, I picked out a spot on the big feller's under jaw an' give him such a kick with my big cow-hide boot 'at he yelled with pain."

"You can bet I didn't wait to see the result, but I jest took it across that o'chard as if the devil was at my heels. Lordy, how my feet did welt the ground! At last I seen a hole in the fence whar a board was gone, and at it I went; I reached it all right, an' was jest about half way through when I heard a shufflin' an' pantin' behind me 'at made my blood freeze up in knotty little lumps. Boys, did you ever know a b'ar could hunt? Well, I have had the fact drilled into me in a purty forcible way; for what knocked me through the fence at such a lively gait that night was nothin' more nor less than that b'ar's head. I was knocked into a heap on the outside of the fence, an' thar I laid, huggin' the ground an' shiverin' an' expectin' every second to find Bruin on top of me."

"Wall, I was purty sore when I got back to the camp, but I didn't say nothin' 'bout that an' the gals put up a nice leetle story, tellin' me how when they saw the b'ar they was so skeert they couldn't say nothin' an' jest ran back to the house. I took in everything they said, an' the next night when they ast me if I wanted to go 'long down with 'em an' explore the old mine, I was jest tickled to death to get the chance. We took an old minin' lamp with us, an' when we got thar I started in ahead, carryin' the light. The old drift hadn't been worked for years, an' dirty water was drippin' from the roof an' coverin' my best coat as I groped my way in, never doubtin' 'at the gals would foller. I had only got a dozen feet or so, an' was jest turnin' 'round to see if the damsel was gettin' on all right when I stumbled over somethin' an' went sprawlin'. The light went out in the flurry an' the first thing I knowed they was a deep growl 'at echoed through the mine an' somethin' had hold of me by the bootleg."

"It was pitch dark in the hole, but a flood of moonlight to one side told me whar the openin' was. With an awful effort I jerked my leg free an' scrambled to my feet with the intention of makin' a dash towards that flood of moonlight. Wall, I had only jest nicely got onto my feet an' turned around when I felt somethin' shoot between my legs an' tip me back. I clutched wildly in front of me an' got my both hands imbedded in the shaggy hair of Bruin—for I knowed right well by this time what it was. The b'ar shot out of that drift at an almighty rapid gait, an' I didn't dare drop off for fear of buttin' my brains out against the sides, so I jest laid flat an' hugged tight, watchin' for a good chance to make a leap."

"Wal, I kin sit here now an' laugh with the rest of you, when I look back at it; but you kin bet they wa'n't no fun in it fer me jest then."

"Right outside the mouth of the drift was a little decline, an' at the bottom of it was a pool of water that was made by the leetle stream flowin' out of the mine. I was all ready, an' as soon as I seen 'at I was out in the open air again I jest slid off, easy as you please, from the b'ar's back an' struck right in that pool of water. Wow! But I did get a nice duckin' an' no mistake."

"The first thing I done was to cuss myself for bein' such a blamed fool as to drop in that water, an' then I pulled myself up onto my feet an' proceeded to look myself over. Never lettin' up on my cussin' for a minute, I meandered back to the camp an' jest sneaked in an' went to bed without sayin' nothin' to nobody. It was a little late when I got around the next mornin', an' jedge my surprise, fellers, when I went behind the fence an' seen one of them blamed gals feedin' an old b'ar outen a tin pan!"

"I seen how the whole thing was in a second. Them gals had been makin' game of me all the time, an' the b'ar 'at had been makin' me so much trouble was nothin' but a tame one 'at wouldn't hurt nobody. Fust I had a notion to go in an' get my shooter an' put an end to the 'tarnal thing for spite, but I concluded it was best to curb my temper an' let it go. The fellers had all gone to work, an' I knowed if I waited until they got back they'd be onto the thing an' have an awful leg on me, so I jest got my togs together an' scratched out as quietly as I could."

"Yes, this is a lonesome, pesky hole, an' no mistake, but they ain't no dudes here nor gals to play hide-an'-go-seek with a feller's heart an' he payin'. I'm durn glad of it."

W. C. T. U.
DEPARTMENT.

[CONDUCTED BY THE LOCAL UNION.]

The young man paced wearily up and down his dark narrow cell. The sun was shining brightly outside, and he could hear the little birds singing gayly, and the laughter of happy children as they trudged along past his gloomy prison on their way to school. All seemed so bright and happy without, while within his heart, all was desolation and gloom, and sorrow reigned supreme. Above all other sounds he could hear a monotonous knock, knock, knock, and every blow of the hammer felt as if spikes were being driven into his heart. He knew they were building the scaffold that was to send his soul into eternity.

"Oh God!" he groaned in his anguish, "why did I do this thing?" He rested his weary head in his hands and reviewed his life all over again. He remembers distinctly how he started on the well beaten path of sin. First, tobacco chewing and cigarette smoking. Second, strong drink, carrying a pistol and keeping bad company, which naturally led to murder. Now he was to pay the penalty of his crime. He had sown the wind and was reaping the whirlwind. It was the same old story. Many a poor fellow before him had travelled the same road, which is bound to end in misery and woe unutterable. Oh what a shameful death to die.

Was he alone to blame for his downfall? Was not the saloon-keeper who furnished the cup that wrought his ruin partly responsible? He did not force him to drink the stuff but he kept the temptation always before him.

The man who sells whiskey is worse than the man who drinks it, for he literally takes the bread out of the mouths of starving women and children. And yet he can walk the earth a free man and his family live in luxury while his patrons march to the gallows and their families to the almshouse.

One of the strongest proofs of the value of temperance to a State is shown in the analysis of the census returns of Massachusetts. In the nineteen cities where license has prevailed during the past ten years the average gain in population has been .266 per cent, as against the fourteen no license cities with an average gain of .447 per cent., the respective gain for five years being .108 and .159 per cent. Seventy per cent of the 202 cities and towns which have increased in population during the past decade have been no license cities and towns.

It is interesting to note that of the ten places showing the largest gain in ten years, nine voted out the saloon nearly every year, and that of the ten places having the greatest gains for five years, eight were for no license. The towns of Winthrop and Everett enjoy the distinction of having made the greatest proportionate gain in the ten years, and they are as free from the saloon as any towns in the state. The largest increase has been in suburban and trolley-car towns, but the same tendency is observed in the way of seeking for homes in places where the saloon is unpopular and where the public policy is for its absolute banishment.

When the people grasp with intelligence the fact that wealth, health and happiness wait upon the suppression of the liquor traffic, then will be near its actual realization.—Union Signal.

Trinity College Notes.

Correspondence of the Telegram.

Trinity College, Jan. 13.—The Science Club held its regular meeting Saturday evening. The meeting was devoted to a general review of the more important scientific achievements of the Nineteenth Century. Prof. Pegram, of the Chemistry department; Dr. Hamaker, of the department of Biology, and Prof. Edwards, of the department of Physics, discussed the progress in the work of their departments.

Prof. Pegram has received, with other very rare chemicals, some "radium" chloride. It is now being investigated spectroscopically and also with reference to its actinic properties.

Prof. R. W. Wood, of the department of Physics at the University of Wisconsin, has donated to the Physical Laboratory a valuable collection of optical instruments, consisting of a plane reflection grating 1400 lines per inch, on silver; a glass transmission grating; a cyanine prism for showing anomalous dispersion and a zone plate. Professor Wood's silver grating was recently presented at a meeting of the Royal Society of Great Britain and elicited general interest and admiration.

The Historical Society will hold a Civic celebration the 22nd of February. The name of the speaker on this occasion will be announced later.

President Kilgo is attending a meeting of the Missionary and Educational Conference of the Tarboro District. He will deliver an address to the Conference.

The mid-year examinations begin today, and will continue till February 1, when the second term begins.

EDITOR'S AWFUL PLIGHT.

F. M. Higgins, editor Seneca, (Illa.) News, was afflicted for years with piles that no doctor or remedy helped until he tried Bucklen's Arnica Salve. He writes two boxes wholly cured him. It's the surest Pile cure on earth and the best salve in the world. Cure guaranteed. Only 25 cents. Sold by C. E. Holton, druggist.

Such little pills as DeWitt's Little Early Risers are very easily taken, and they are wonderfully effective in cleansing the liver and bowels. Howard Gardner.

ROBBED THE GRAVE.

A startling incident, of which Mrs. John Oliver, of Philadelphia, was the subject, is narrated by him as follows: "I was in a most dreadful condition. My skin was almost yellow, eyes sunken, tongue coated, pain continually in back and sides; no appetite—gradually growing weaker day by day. Three physicians had given me up. Fortunately, a friend advised trying Electric Bitters: and to my great joy and surprise, the first bottle made a decided improvement. I continued their use for three weeks and am now a well man. I know they saved my life, and robbed the grave of another victim." No one should fail to try them. Only 50 cents per bottle at C. E. Holton's drug store.

RHEUMATISM—CATARRH—DISEASES CURED BY B. B. B.

McLREE'S
Wine of Cardui

There is no use talking—a baby in the house is the link that binds husband and wife together. Nothing is sadder than fruitless wedlock. The prattling and cooing of the little ones offset a thousand times the occasional worries and trials of life. When a wife is barren, there is a derangement somewhere in the genital organs, caused by one or more of those common disorders known as "female troubles". Wine of Cardui is the remedy. It puts the organs of generation in a strong and healthy condition, fitting the wife for the sacred duty of reproducing her kind. During the period of gestation the entire system of the expectant mother is built up to withstand the ordeal of labor, and when the little one makes its advent it is lusty and strong, well-fitted to grow to maturity in perfect health. The mother, too, passes through the trial with little pain and no dread. Wine of Cardui is truly a wonderful medicine for women.

The Place--The Bargains.

Johnson & Dorsett's of course is the place. They are selling out for the purpose of going out of business. It is a genuine sale and they do just as they promise. They do not expect to begin business again, and they are not trying to clean out old stock to make room for new.

The bargains? Oh, they are there, plenty of them. If you haven't been to see, but of course you have, everybody is going, ask your neighbor about them. They are too many to be enumerated here. Come and look over them. There is no doubt about your being well pleased and paid for your trouble.

OLMSTED-POTWELL-BRENNEMAN COMING.

The contract has just been closed for the appearance on January 23rd of the above named company of artists presenting a double program on that evening. The first half of the program will be devoted to choice musical gems and the latter part to the presentation of Richard Strauss' latest and most beautiful work, "Enoch Arden."

Mr. Olmsted is a true artist and has won the praise of both press and public. His late European tour with Margadent was a wonderful success, and the management is to be congratulated in securing such an artist as the leading star with his company. Miss Potwin (formerly of Joachim's great orchestra in Berlin) is a wonderful violinist, she is the proud possessor of a genuine Cremona made by Guarnerius, and has the title St. Teresa. She is reputed to be the finest violinist in America today.

Miss Breneman, the dramatic interpreter of Enoch Arden, has also a wonderful reputation. She is the embodiment of grace and a very beautiful woman. She is intensely interesting; a true delineator of human character in the conception and interpretation of her work. This presentation is something entirely new, this being the first American season. It will undoubtedly be one of the most enjoyable events this city has ever had and in fact is a society event. The company has many important engagements to fill in the South. In some of the cities the entire capacity of the halls and opera houses has already been spoken for. A popular price will prevail here.

The musical troupe presenting "Enoch Arden" will be the next attraction at the Academy of Music. Commenting on this company the Raleigh News and Observer says:

"The auditorium at the Governor's Mansion was the scene of the second recital presented by Mr. Stanley Olmsted."

"Fresh from his great success on last Friday evening in the rendition of the inimitable melo-drama 'Enoch Arden,' by Richard Strauss, Mr. Olmsted was in good shape to score the victory awaiting him in his special piano recital."

"Although he has been heard on numerous occasions by Raleigh audiences he has never appeared to so great advantage as on this occasion. It is something unusual to listen to such playing in this city, and Mr. Olmsted has made a profound impression with his splendid work."

"His program was charming and remarkably well balanced."

Reserved seats for "Enoch Arden" will be on sale at Fariss' drug store Monday. Price 50c.
